In scriptA.py: def set_a(): print(SOME_VARIABLE) print(sess.run(SOME_VARIABLE)) Then in scriptB.py: import scriptA import json print(scriptA.set_a()) So what I'm trying to do is call the value of the variable set in scriptA.py. This is the error: AttributeError:'str' object has no attribute'set_a' What's wrong with this? A: I'm trying to call the value of the variable set in scriptA.py. That's not how you call a function: just import the function, call it, and pass the arguments that were required by the function. import scriptA print(scriptA.set_a("whatever")) For your specific question, there's no need to import scriptA and import json. Just import scriptA and call set_a. In your specific case, you don't pass any arguments. (The scriptA module is not imported, so there's no need to do that either. See the import statement in the documentation). print(scriptA.set_a()) If you want to pass arguments to set_a, you must make it a class method: @classmethod def
